On motion of Mr. Caswell the the river. On being asked as to the practicability of confining the river within a bed of 3,600 feet in width, from Cairo down, Gen. Wright stated that it was practicable from a standpoint of engineering. It was a matter of expense—he could not give an estimate of the expense, the work had not extended for enough to make this possible. He thought that by the time the appropriation shall be expended, the experiment would be carried for enough to make it pos sible to estimate the cost and growth of such a work. In reply to questions by Mr. Robinson, of Massachusetts, he gave as his opinion that the changes of river beds might be prevented, that so far as navigation is concerned the work of confining the river is only needed in the volving a very large and unnecessary outlay of money. He declined to attempt an esti-mate. As to levees he believed the bottom of the river would be favorably affected by a levee system, and so would be improved for low water navigation. Below the mouth of Ked River there was never any trouble to navigation in high or low water. He thought it an unfair question to ask him what possible use levees could be to navigation below that point. He thought, however, that it would decrease the deposit by increasing the current, though there had never been any trouble below that point from such deposit. The river there is from 50 to 100 feet deep. He thought the completion of the contem. He thought the completion of the contemplated works would not clearly demonstrate the fact that other points on the river would not have to be protected. If at Plum Point and the other points experimented with the plans worked successfully, it would show the feasibility of expending money for works at other points. The last appropriation made was larger than necessary to make tests at the points where they had been contemplated.
